New LinkedIn Data Leak Leaves 700 Million Users Exposed

June 27, 2021 By Sven Taylor — 31 Comments

Data from 700 million LinkedIn users has been put up for sale online, making this one of the largest LinkedIn data leaks to date. After analyzing the data and making contact with the seller, we have updated this article with more information, including how the data was obtained and the possible impact on LinkedIn users.

Data leak on LinkedIn: This is how those affected receive information and, if necessary, compensation

July 5, 2021 · Martin Steiger, attorney

The data of around 700 million LinkedIn users has been tapped and is offered for sale on the Darknet. This means that around 93 percent of LinkedIn users are affected by the data leak.

Strengthening civil society together

By Kire on 06/04/2021 in general

The advancing digitization affects more and more areas of our society. Like other technological developments, it has advantages and disadvantages. In addition to politics, civil society is therefore called upon to demand the best possible benefit for the general public and to counterbalance business and interest groups. To this end, we are launching the "Politpulse" project. Through Politpulse, civil society should be able to participate more actively and comprehensively in the social discourse and the political process.

First experiences with the information service

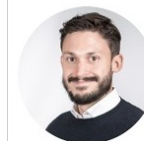

With the revision of the Ordinance on Internet Domains, the rules for using the WHOIS service have now changed fundamentally. Only people with an overriding legitimate interest will receive information about the holder's personal data.

Text: Angelo Marchetta, published on 05.07.2021

SWITCH is responsible for operating the .ch internet domain. The foundation manages and updates a database containing all information on the domain names, which it requires to exercise its function as the registry operator. The "WHOIS" service used to be a public information source which made the personal data of the holders and technical contacts accessible to all interested parties. Since the revision of the Ordinance on Internet Domains (VID) came into effect on 1 January 2021, Switzerland has undergone a major system change. Only people who can credibly show that they have an overriding legitimate interest are given access to the personal data of the holder of a specific domain name.
